idea was absurd and I would not do what they wanted of me; but then, they must have their own way also and would not let me alone. So, in their eagerness to make me comply with their wishes, a warder and . a nurse combined, started almost a wrestling match with me. in order to make me lie down; but it was no easy job, even for them both to prevail against me and 1 continued to keep both at bay for some time. Tired at last, they came to realise that it was no use against me, when I had made it a point not to yield; so that there followed a compromise and I was allowed to keep sitting erect on the chair, instead of being felled flat altogether, as was their intention, at first.

In the meantime, the super-natural made it? appearance at the next door. The very same brother that had met rne on our way while leaving the Andamans, now appeared here also; and as I turned to look in the direction from which I seemed to hear his voice coming, it struck me as something quite inexplicable as to how his form appeared so plainly visible to me, even though there were a good many rooms in between us, with their brick-walls intercepting. This time it was not that
